It Is the Spirit That Gives Life: A Stoic Understanding of Pneuma in John's Gospel

Gitte Buch-Hansen

considering Origen and Chrysostom, John's Gospel has been valued because of such a lot of non-secular one of the New Testament writings. Even though Origen acknowledges the Stoic personality of John's assertion that God is pneuma (4:24), an example of the gospel in gentle of Stoic physics has no longer but been carried out. As a substitute the Johannine spirit has been absorbed into the be aware and misplaced its distinctive personality as actual mediator among the divine and humane spheres. Combining her perception into Stoic physics and old physiology, the writer situates her thesis within the significant discussions of recent Johannine scholarship and demonstrates new suggestions to famous problems.
