Thomas Centolella

Poetry. Winner of the 1991 American publication Award and the Bay sector ebook Reviewers' Award. "Selected by way of Denise Levertov for the nationwide Poetry Series, this normally powerful first collection, usually set within the San Francisco Bay region or within the wilderness, showcases Centolella's reward for locating ask yourself within the quotidian, for convalescing 'the taken-for-granted.' In 'Task,' the poet writes, 'It's now not a savior the area wishes / yet a savoring spirit, how to have fun with what is already / began to vanish,' and his top paintings celebrates the beauty, evanescence Terra Firma and inevitable grief of mortal life. An elegy for his Lebanese grandmother, 'Sito,' is mainly moving, as is 'Ossi dei morti' (bones of the dead), concerning the Italian candy so named: 'It's darkish and bittersweet, / this chocolate marrow, Terra Firma this short time / humans name a life. We chew into it / hard. We do that together. / an area remedy for sorrow.' At their least interesting, the poems be afflicted by pedestrianism and an abrupt, gunshot style--e.g., in 'The Garden': 'The towards terra firma one is / the extra firma one feels. After a protracted hike, I stink, / for this reason I am'"--Publishers Weekly.
