German and Dutch verb buildings express a wealthy array of syntactic phenomena that experience thus far been underexposed within the literature, although they've got proved to be a resource of considerable difficulties in theoretical grammar. The cross-linguistic examine of verb buildings and complementation has been ruled by means of perspectives deriving from English or, for that matter, Latin. The German and Dutch complementation systems, however, characteristic a number of very important homes which are lacking from English yet take place in lots of different languages. famous yet merely partly understood examples are clause-final verb clusters and the so-called 3rd Construction. within the current book, those and comparable phenomena are addressed through best representatives of assorted faculties of linguistic thought, particularly Head-driven word constitution Grammar (HPSG), Generative Grammar, Lexical sensible Grammar (LFG), Tree adjacent Grammar (TAG), functionality Grammar, and Semantic Syntax. via bringing jointly the various theoretical analyses into one volume, the editors desire to stimulate comparative reviews of the formalisms.
